My compoſitions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildneſs of nature, without the nicer regularities of art Spectator, N° 477.

ELEGANT adj. [elegans, Latin]

1. Pleaſing with ſmaller beauties

Trifles themſelves are elegant in him. Pope.
There may ſt thou find ſome elegant retreat. London.

2. Neat, not coarſe, not groſs.

Polite with candour, elegant with eaſe. Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant]

1. In ſuch a manner as to pleaſe without elevation.
2. Neatly, nicely, with minute beauty.

Whoever would write elegantly, muſt have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period; there muſt be proper diſtances and pauſes. Pope's Odyſſey, Notes.

ELEGIACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Uſed in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.

Let elegiack lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of diſtant flutes. Gay's Trivia.

ELEGY. n. ſ.

1. A mournful ſong.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forſooth deſcribing the name of Roſalind. Shak. As you like it.

2. A funeral ſong.

So on meanders banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful ſwan ſings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A ſhort poem without points or turns.

ELEMENT n. ſ. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The firſt or conſtituent principle of any things

If nature ſhould intermit her courſe, thoſe principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, ſhould loſe the qualities which now they have. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 3.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of thoſe ingredients in bodies, which ſome call elements, and others principles. Boyle's Phyſ. Conſider.

Simple ſubſtances are either ſpirits, which have no manner of compoſition, or the firſt principles of bodies, uſually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, uſually ſo called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is compoſed.

The king is but a man: the violet ſmells to him as it doth to me; and the element ſhews to him as it doth to me. Shakeſ.

My deareſt ſiſter, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy ſpirits all of comfort. Shakeſ. Anth. and Cleopatra.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the ſea,
Or ſwell the curled waters. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

The heavens and the earth will paſs away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you were able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon's Hol. War.

He from his flaming ſhip his children ſent,
To periſh in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or ſphere of any thing: as water of fiſh.

We are ſimple men; we do not know the works by charms, by ſpells, and ſuch dawbry as is beyond our element. Shakeſp.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 275.

They ſhew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

4. An ingredient, a conſtituent part.

Who ſet the body and the limbs
Of this great ſport together, as you gueſs?
——One ſure that promiſes no element
In ſuch a buſineſs. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The loweſt or firſt rudiments of literature or ſcience.

With religion it fareth as with other ſciences; the firſt delivery of the elements thereof muſt, for like conſideration, be framed according to the weak and ſlender capacity of young learners. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 28.

Every pariſh ſhould keep a petty ſchoolmaſter, which ſhould bring up children in the firſt elements of letters. Spenſer on Irel.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal. iv. 3.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant maſter. Dryden's Dufreſn.

To ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one ſuch body be met with, in thoſe ſaid to be elemented bodies, I now queſtion. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

2. To conſtitute, to make as a firſt principle.

Dull ſublunary lover's love,
Whoſe ſoul is ſenſe, cannot admit
Of abſence, 'cauſe it doth remove
The thing which elemented it Donne.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by ſome of the four elements.

If duſky ſpots are vary'd on his brow,
And ſtreak'd with red, a troubl'd colour flow,
That ſullen mixture ſhall at once declare
Winds, rain and ſtorms, and elemental war. Dryden's Virg.
——yielding minds to water glide away,
And ſip, with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Ariſing from firſt principles.

Leeches are by ſome accounted poiſon not properly, that is, by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or ſo much as elemental repugnancy, but inwardly taken, they faſten upon the veins, and occaſion an effuſion of blood. Brown's Vu. Err.

ELEMENTARITY. n. ſ. [from elementary.] Containing the rudiments or firſt principles, ſimplicity of nature; abſence of compoſition; being uncompounded.

A very large claſs of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from elementary.] Uncompounded; having only one principle or conſtituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious ſediment of terreſtrial matter, and is not a ſimple elementary water. Ray on the Creat.

The elementary ſalts of animals are not the ſame as they appear by diſtillation. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ELEMI n. ſ.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a reſin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in ſtarchy maſſes, or in cylinders, of a yellowiſh colour. Its ſmell is acrid and reſinous. It is very rare in Europe, and ſuppoſed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The ſpurious or American elemi, almoſt the only kind known, is of a whitiſh colour, with a greater or leſs tinge of a greeniſh or yelloviſh. It is of an agreeable ſmell, and of an acrid and bitteriſh taſte. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Braſilians wound at night, and in the morning collect the reſin that has run out. Hill's Materia Medica.

ELENCH. n. ſ. [elenchus, Latin.] An argument; a ſophiſm.

The firſt deluſion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation might be the ſame elench continued, as when he ſaid, Ye ſhall not die, that was, in his equivocation, you ſhall not incur preſent death. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 4.

Diſcover the ſalacies of our common adverſary, that old ſophiſter, who puts the moſt abuſive elenchs on us. Dr. of Piety.

ELEOTS n. ſ. Some name the apples in requeſt in the cyder countries ſo; not known by that name in ſeveral parts of England. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

ELEPHANT n. ſ. [elephas, Latin.] The largeſt of quadrupeds, of whoſe ſagacity, faithfulneſs, prudence, and even underſtanding, many ſurpriſing relations are given. This animal is not carnivorous, but feeds on hay, herbs, and all ſorts of pulſe; and it is ſaid to be extremely long lived. It is naturally very gentle, but when enraged, no creature is more terrible. He is ſupplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, like a large trumpet, which hangs between his teeth, and ſerves him for hands: by one blow with his trunk he will kill a camel or a horſe, and will raiſe a prodigious weight with it. His teeth are the ivory ſo well known in Europe, ſome of which have been ſeen as large as a man's thigh, and a fathom in length. Wild elephants are taken with the help of a female ready for the male: ſhe is confined to a narrow place, round which pits are dug; and theſe being covered with a little earth ſcattered over hurdles, the male elephants eaſily fall into the ſnare. In copulation the female receives the male lying upon her back; and ſuch is his pudicity, that he never covers the female ſo long as any one appears in ſight. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glaſſes, elephants with holes. Sh. Jul. Cæſ.
The elephant hath joints, but not for courteſy,
His legs are for neceſſity, not flexure. Sh. Troil. and Creſſida.

2. Ivory, the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd ſhall Cæſar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Ep.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. ſ. [elephantiaſis, Latin.] A ſpecies of leproſy, ſo called from covering the ſkin with incruſtations like thoſe on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Latin.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To ELEVATE. v. a. [levo, Latin.]

1. To raiſe up aloft.

This ſubterraneous heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyſs. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raiſe the mind with great conceptions.

Others apart ſat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reaſon'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate. Milt. P. L.
In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders in thoſe remote ſpeculations it may ſeem to be elevated with, it ſtirs not beyond ſenſe or reflection. Locke.
Now riſing fortune elevates his mind,
He ſhines uncrowned, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate the mind with vicious pride.

5. To leſſen by detraction. This ſenſe, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in uſe

When the judgments of learned men are alledged againſt you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppoſe unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker, b. ii.

ELE'VATE. part. adj. [from elevated] Exalted, raiſed aloft.

On each ſide an imperial city ſtood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On ſeven ſmall hills. Addiſon's Paradiſe Regain'd, b. ii.

ELEVATION. n. ſ. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raiſing aloft.

The diſruption of the ſtrata, the elevation of ſome, and depreſſion of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a diſcerning principle. Woodward's Nat. Hiſtory.

2. Exaltation, dignity

Angels, in their ſeveral degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehenſive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all poſſible application and elevation of ſpirit, with all the heart, ſoul and mind. Norris.

4. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of ſpirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hammond, b. [illegible]

5. The height of any heavenly body with reſpect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as thoſe which have more than ſeventy three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

ELEVA'TOR. n. ſ. [from elevate] A raiſer or lifter up, applied to [illegible]

ELEVEN adj. [ænbepen, Saxon.] Ten and one, one more than ten

Had I a dozen ſons, each in my love ſake, and none leſs dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuouſly ſurfeit out of action. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to ſpeak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World

ELF. n. ſ. plural elves [elf, Welſh. Baxter's Gloſſ.]

1. A wandering ſpirit, ſuppoſed to be ſeen in wild unfrequented places

Through this houſe give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowſie fire;
Every elf, and fairy ſprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shak. Midſ. Night's Dream.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one viſion touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurſe and all the prieſt have taught;
Of airy elves by moon light ſhadow ſeen,
The ſilver token, and the circled green. Pope's R. of the L.

2. A devil.

That we may angels ſeem, we paint them elves;
And are but ſatires to ſet up ourſelves. Dryden's Eſſ. on Sat.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fit'd it ſo well of himſelf Swift

To ELF, v. a. [from the noun] To entangle hair in ſo intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have ſuppoſed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair ſo matted together, hath had the name of locks. Hanmer

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots Shakeſ. K. Lear.

ELFLOCK. n. ſ. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twiſted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horſes in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul ſluttiſh hairs,
Which, once untangl'd, much miſfortune bodes. Shakeſp.

To ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin] To ſtrike out, to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the ſame truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mank.

He elicits theſe acts out of the meer lapſed ſtate of human nature. Cheyne's Phil. Pr.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act, brought from poſſibility to real exiſtence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekneſs; meekneſs being ordinated to theſe virtues. Hammond's Pract. C.

The ſchools diſpute whether, in morals, the external [illegible] ſuperadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South's Sermons.

ELICITATION n. ſ. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the ſchools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which [illegible]on, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bra[illegible]

ELIDE v. a. [elido, Latin] To cut in pieces.

[illegible] are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom theſe objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and ſtrength of the argument is elided. Hooker, b. iv. ſ. 4.

ELIGIBILITY n. ſ. [from eligible.] Worthineſs to be choſen.

The buſineſs of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to chuſe them in conſequence of the report made by the underſtanding, as to their eligibility or goodneſs. Fiddes's Sermons.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin] Fit to be choſen, worthy of choice; preferable

A Britiſh miniſtry ought to be ſatisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private ſcheme is wiſeſt, they can perſuade him that next to his own plan, that of the government is the moſt eligible Addiſon's Freeholder, N°. 48.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the leaſt abatement of thoſe conditions? Swift.

That the moſt plain, ſhort, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in ſome or all of theſe qualities. Swift

Certainty, in a deep diſtreſs, is more eligible than ſuſpenſe. Courtſhip.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. ſ. [from eligible.] Worthineſs to be choſen; preferableneſs.

ELIMINATION. n. ſ. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing, the act of turning out of doors, rejection. L. [illegible]

ELISION. n. ſ. [eliſio, Latin]

1. The act of cutting off. as, th' attempt, there is an eliſion of a ſyllable.

You will obſerve the abbreviations and eliſions, by which conſonants of moſt obdurate ſounds are joined together, without any ſoftening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Diviſion; ſeparation of parts.

The cauſe given of ſound, that it would be an eliſion of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or elſe an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 124.

ELIXATION n. ſ. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or ſtewing any thing.

Even to ourſelves, and more perfect animals, water performs no ſubſtantial nutrition, ſerving for refrigeration, dilution of ſolid aliment, and its elixation in the ſtomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. ſ. [Arabick]

1. A medicine made by ſtrong infuſion, where the ingredients are almoſt diſſolved in the menſtruum, and give it a thicker conſiſtence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the ſhow'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymiſts hope to tranſmute metals to gold.

No chymiſt yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal Donne.

3. The extract or quinteſſence of any thing.

In the ſoul, when the ſupreme faculties move regularly, the inferior paſſions and affections following, there ariſes a ſerenity unknown by beyond the higheſt quinteſſence and elixir of worldly delight. South's Sermons

4. Any cordial, or invigorating ſubſtance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii.

ELK n. ſ. [eolc, Saxon]

The elk is a large and ſtately animal of the ſtag kind. The neck is ſhort and ſlender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breath. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyiſh, in Summer it is paler, generally three inches in length, and equalling horſehair in thickneſs. The upper lip of the elk is large. The articulations of its legs are cloſe, and the ligaments hard, ſo that its joints are leſs pliable than thoſe of other animals. The horns of the male elk are ſhort and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with ſeveral prominences in its edges. Elks live in herds, and are very timorous. The hoof of the left hinder foot only, has been famous for the cure of epilepſies; but it is probable, that the hoof of any other animal will do as well. Hill's Mat. Med.

And, ſcarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies ſlumb'ring ſullen in the white abyſs. Thomſon's Winter.

ELL n. ſ. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A meaſure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are ſaid to make yearly forty thouſand pieces of linnen cloath, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addiſon.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long meaſure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleaſures as they come, but go:
Defer not the laſt virtue, life's poor ſpan
Make not an ell by trifling in thy woe Herbert.

ELLIPSIS. n. ſ. [ἔλλειψις]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which ſomething is left out neceſſary to be ſupplied by the hearer.

The words are delivered by way of ellipſis, Rem. iv 18 Hamm.

2. [In geometry] An oval figure, being generated from the ſection of a cone, by a plane cutting both ſides of the cone, but not parallel to the baſe, which produces a circle, and meeting with the baſe when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, deſcribe an ellipſis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The planets could not poſſibly acquire ſuch revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipſes very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipſis.] Having the form of an
ELLIPTICK. } ellipſis, oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whoſe foci the ſun is, and by a radius from the ſun deſcribe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we muſt find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greateſt diameter going tranſverſely from ſide to ſide. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM n. ſ. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The flower conſiſts of one leaf, ſtriped like a bell, having many ſtamina in the center: from the bottom ariſes the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous or leafy fruit, almoſt heart-ſhaped; in the middle of which is placed a pear-ſhaped ſeed-veſſel, containing one ſeed of the ſame ſhape. The ſpecies are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by ſome called the Britiſh elm; the ſmooth leaved or witch elm. It is generally believed neither of them were originally natives of this country, but they have propagated themſelves by ſeeds and ſuckers [illegible] long poſſeſſion; eſpecially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots, which will ſend forth various twigs. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or cloſe plantation, and their ſhade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them. They are alſo proper to plant at a diſtance from a garden, or building, to break the violence of winds; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they ſhould not be planted too near a garden where fruit-trees or other plants are placed, becauſe the roots of the elm run ſuperficially near the top of the ground, and will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nouriſhment. Miller.

The rural ſeat,
Whoſe lofty elms and venerable oaks
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds. Thomſon's Spring.

2. It was uſed to ſupport vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my huſband, I a vine,
Whoſe weakneſs married to thy ſtronger ſtate,
Makes me with thy ſtrength to communicate. Shakeſpeare.

[illegible]

1. The power of fluent ſpeech.

A travelled doctor of phyſick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Eloquence; flow of language

Whoſe taſte, too long forborne, at firſt eſſay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for ſpeech to ſpeak thy praiſe. Milton.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, ſo much more to expreſs thoſe thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

3. The power of expreſſion or diction

The third happineſs of this poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought ſo found, and varied, in apt, ſignificant, and ſounding words. Dryden.

ELOGY. n. ſ. [eloge, French.] Praiſe, panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vaniſh into praiſes and elogies. Wotton.

If I durſt ſay all I know of the elogies received from abroad concerning him, I ſhould offend the modeſty of our author Boyle.

Some excellent perſons, above my approbation or elogy, have conſidered this ſubject. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To ELOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French] To put at a diſtance, to remove one far from another. Now diſuſed.

From worldly cares himſelf he did eloin,
And greatly ſhunned many exerciſe Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 4.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou ſhalt do
To anger deſtiny, as ſhe doth us;
How I ſhall ſtay, though ſhe eloigne me thus,
And how poſterity ſhall know it too. Donne.

To ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.] To lengthen, to draw out; to protract, to ſtretch.

To ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a diſtance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Braſilia, the South point of the compaſs varyeth twelve degrees unto the Weſt, but elongating from the coaſt of Braſilia, towards the ſhore of Africa, it varyeth eaſtward. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 2.

ELONGATION. n. ſ. [from elongate]

1. The act of ſtretching or lengthening itſelf

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are ſeparated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The ſtate of being ſtretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is ſo extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour ſoaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be ſtretched, and to be thruſt quite out upon every little force. Wiſeman's Surgery.

4. Diſtance; ſpace at which one thing is diſtant from another.

The diſtant points in the celeſtial expanſe appear to the eye in ſo ſmall a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanv. Scepſ c. 11.

5. Departure, removal

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of deſcent, or elongation. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 2.

To ELOPE. v. n. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break looſe; to eſcape from law or reſtraint.

It is neceſſary to treat women as members of the body politick, ſince great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addiſon's Freeholder, N°. 32.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whoſe wife elopes ſome thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial ſolace dies a martyr. Pope's Ep. of Horace.

ELOPEMENT. n. ſ. [from elope.] Departure from juſt reſtraint; rejection of lawful power

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her huſband to live with an adulterer, and with whom ſhe lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent huſband, truſting to the efficacy of this principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

ELOPS, n. ſ. [ἔλοψ.] A fiſh; reckoned however by Milton among the ſerpents.

Scorpion and aſp, and amphiſbena dire,
Cerаſtes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipſas. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 525.

ELOQUENCE. n. ſ. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of ſpeaking with fluency and elegance, oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency

Say ſhe be mute, and will not ſpeak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And ſay ſhe uttereth piercing eloquence. Shakeſp.

Fit words attended on his weighty ſenſe,
And mild perſuaſion flowed in eloquence. Pope's Odyſſey, b. viii.

ELOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant ſpeech.

The Lord of hoſts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counſellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator Iſaiah iii.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dull we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE pronoun. [ellen, Saxon] Other; one beſides: it is applied both to perſons and things.

To ſtand [illegible], and ſweating with deſire to ſee him, thinking [illegible] life, putting all affairs elſe in oblivion, as if there were nothing elſe to be done but to ſee him. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p.

Should he or any elſe ſearch, he will find evidence of the Divine Wiſdom. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He ſays, 'twas then [illegible],
He did it when he had nothing elſe to do.

ELSE. adv. Otherwiſe

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beſide, by lot my due,
But ſtand aloof, and think profane to view
This faulchion, elſe, not hitherto with blood,
Theſe noiſome fields ſhall fatten with thy blood Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we ſhould be aſſured, but either by an internal impreſſion of the notion [illegible] our minds, or elſe by ſuch external and [illegible] reaſon tells us muſt be attributed to ſome cauſe?

E'MERALD. n. ſ. [emeraude, French; ſmaragdus, Latin.] A green precious ſtone.

The emerald is evidently the ſame with the antient ſmaragdus, and, in its moſt perfect ſtate, is perhaps the moſt beautiful of all the gems: it is found from the ſixteenth of an inch in diameter, to the ſize of a walnut. The rough emerald is uſually of a very bright and naturally poliſhed ſurface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. It is of all the various ſhades of green, from the deepeſt to the paleſt, and doubtleſs is found at times wholly colourleſs, but then it is eſteemed, by our jewelers, a white ſaphire. The oriental emerald is of the hardneſs of the ſaphire and ruby, and is ſecond only to the diamond in luſtre and brightneſs: they are only found in the kingdoms of Cambay. The American, called by our jewelers oriental emeralds, are found in Peru, of the hardneſs of the garnet: the European are ſomewhat ſofter, but harder than cryſtal, and found in Sileſia. The coloured cryſtals, ſold as occidental emeralds, are from the mines of Germany. Hill on Foſſ.

The emerald is a bright graſs green: it is found in fiſſures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward's F[illegible]

Her greater, purer, finer than before. Donne.

EO'LIPILE n. f. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe, which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, [illegible] ying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an eolipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns it to vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EPACT. n. f. [ἐπακτὸς.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days, the second year 22 days; the third 33 days but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact, and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by threes; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon seems to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations, so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 5320 year. Ames on Time.

EPA'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth, of which latter are made the epaulments of the places of arms for the cavalry behind the trenches. It sometimes denotes a demi-bastion and a square bastion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EPE'NTHESIS. n. f. [ἐπένθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHA. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezek. xlv. 11.

EPHE'MERA. n. f.

1. A fever that terminates in one day.

2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL } n. f. [ἐφήμερος.] Diurnal; beginning and end-
EPHE'MERICK. } ing in a day.

This was no more than a meer bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral bit of appearance. Watts.

EPHE'MERIS. n. f. [ἐφήμερις.]

1. A journal, an account of daily transactions.

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris,
For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryd. Nun's Tale.

EPHE'MERIST. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets, one who studies or practises astrology.

The night immediately before, he was dr[illegible] fighting the art of those foolish astrologers [illegible] ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope [illegible] Isaac Vossius Forrest

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐφήμερος and worm.] A ſort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam obſerves of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the ſame. Derh.

EPHOD. n. f. [אפד] A ſort of ornament worn by the Hebrew prieſts. That worn by the high prieſt was richly compoſed of gold, blue, purple, crimſon, and twiſted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two ſhoulders, were two large precious ſtones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael, upon each ſtone ſix names. Where the ephod croſſed the high prieſt's breaſt, was a ſquare ornament, called the breaſt-plate, in which twelve precious ſtones were ſet, with the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael engraved on them, one on each ſtone. The ephods worn by the other prieſts were only of plain linen.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen. Ex. xxx ix. 2.

Array'd in ephods, nor ſo few
As are thoſe pearls of morning dew,
Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys's Paraphr.

EPIC adj. [epicus, Latin; ἐπικὸς.] Narrative, comprehending narrations, not acted, but rehearſed. It is uſually ſuppoſed to be heroick, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whoſe name ſhall live in epic ſong,
While muſic numbers, or while verſe has feet. Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the paſſions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Pope's Diſcourſe of Epic Poem.

EPICEDIUM. n. f. [ἐπικήδιον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above ſhall hear each day
One dirge diſpatch'd unto your clay,
Or, your own anthems, ſhall become
Your laſting epicedium. Sandys's Paraphraſe.

EPICURE. n. f. [epicurus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus, a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly falſe thanes,
And mingle with the Engliſh epicures. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The epicure buckles to ſtudy, when ſhame, or the deſire to recommend himſelf to his miſtreſs, ſhall make him uneaſy in the want of any ſort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICURE'AN. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] One who holds the phyſiological principles of Epicurus.

The Platoniſts have their ſoul of the world, and the Epicureans their ſoul of the world, and the Epicureans their endeavour towards motion in their atoms when at reſt. Locke.

EPICU'RAN. adj. Luxurious, contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feaſts,
Keep his brain fuming, epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyleſs ſauce his appetite. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
What a damn'd epicurean raſcal is this! Shakeſpeare.

EPICU'RISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; ſenſual enjoyment; groſs pleaſure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and ſquires,
Men ſo diſorder'd, ſo debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn, epicuriſm and luſt
Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

There is not half ſo much epicuriſm in any of their moſt ſtudied luxuries, as a bleeding ſaint at their mercy. Government of the Tongue, § 6.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greateſt ſenſuality, a piece of epicuriſm. Calamy's Sermons.

EPICYCLE. n. f. [ἐπὶ and κύκλος.] A little circle whoſe center is in the circumference of a greater; or a ſmall orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet faſtened to it round about its proper center. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or leſſer orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the ſphere
With centre and eccentric, ſcribbl'd o'er,
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

EPICYCLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλοειδὲς.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL. } n. f. [ἐπὶ and δῆμος.]
EPIDE'MICK. }

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemick diſeaſe, but to proceed from a malignity in the conſtitution of the air, gathered by the diſpoſitions of ſeaſons. Bacon's Henry VII.

As the proportion of acute and epidemical diſeaſes ſhews the aptneſs of the air to ſudden and vehement impreſſions, ſo the chronical diſeaſes ſhew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. Generally prevailing, affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are thoſe who ſtand as exceptions. South's Sermons.

He ought to have been baſhed in loſing his money, or in other amuſements equally lawful and epidemick among perſons of honour. Swift.

[illegible] ns o' th' world, they're all in all,
[illegible] on epidemical. Cleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. f. [ἐπιδερμὶς.] The ſcarf-ſkin of a man's body.

EPIGRA'M. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A ſhort poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; doſt thou think I care for a ſatire or an epigram? Shak.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant phyſician, that had been the death of thouſands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ
An epigram that boaſts more truth than wit. Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL }
EPIGRAMMA'TICK } [ἐπιγραμματικὸς.]

1. Dealing in epigrams, writing epigrams.

[illegible] Weſt,
Thinketh no ominous foreſpeaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

[illegible] roſs hyperboles: he maintains majeſty in the midſt of plainneſs; he ſhines, but glares not; and is flattering, without ambition. Addiſon.

He has none of thoſe little points and puerilities that are ſo often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan, none of thoſe ſwelling ſentiments which are ſo frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of thoſe mixt embelliſhments of Taſſo. Adiſon's Spectator, N° 279.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jeſt upon a poor wit, at firſt might have had an epigrammatiſt for its father, and been afterwards gravely underſtood by ſome painful collector. Pope.

Such a cuſtomer the epigrammatiſt Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the faireſt ſtreet twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with [illegible]

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] An convulſion, or convulſive motion of the whole body, or of ſome of its parts, with a loſs of ſenſe. A convulſive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any parts with ſo great violence, that the mind cannot reſtrain them from attraction. Quincy.

My lord is fall'n into an epilepſy.
This is the ſecond fit. Shak. Othello.

Melancholy diſtempers are deduced from ſpirits drawn from that cacochymia, the phrenitis from choleriek ſpirits, and the epilepſy from fumes. Flyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepſy.] Convulſed, diſeaſed with an epilepſy.

A plague upon your epileptick viſage!
[illegible]

Epileptick ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any ſteams, even ſuch as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or ſpeech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no buſh, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do uſe good buſhes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

Are you mad, you dog;
I am to riſe and ſpeak the epilogue. Dryden's Tyran. Love.

EPINY'CTIS. n. f. [ἐπινυκτὶς.] A ſore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigneſs of a lupin, of a duſky red, and ſometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain: it diſchargeth firſt a ſanies of bloody matter. Wiſeman's Surgery.

EPI'PHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνια.] A church feſtival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Chriſtmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifeſted to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing ſtar, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a concluſive ſentence not cloſely connected with the words forgoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to ſkip over all ſentences where he ſpied a note of admiration at the end. I believe, if thoſe preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other aſleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the iſles, who, if they be ſincere, may probably groan at the ſound. Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφορὰ.] An inflammation of any part, but more eſpecially a defluxion of humours on the eyes.

[illegible]

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, φύλλον and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves, being the same with capillaries. Harris.

EPI'PHYSIS n. f. [ἐπιφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion, one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiseman.

EPI'PLOCE n. f. [ἐπιπλοκὴ.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spurned his enemies, but contemned [illegible] not only contemned, but accused [illegible]

EPISCOPACY n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

[illegible] durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction, so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe's Par.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Roger's Sermons.

2. Veiled in a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

EPI'SCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

[illegible] n. f. [ἐπεισόδιον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet growing naturally from it.

The poem, which we have now under our consideration, hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison's Spectator.

EPISODICAL } adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode,
EPISODICK } [illegible] belonging to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were discovered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryd.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [ἐπὶ and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.
2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited, by all possible methods, to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and [illegible] Diet.

EPISTLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολὴ.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters, suitable to letters.
2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison's Guardian, N°. 114.

EPI'STLER n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPITAPH. n. f. [ἐπιτάφιος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live till, and write mine epitaph. Shakespeare.
Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit, and strength, that only yields to thine Smith.

EPITHALAMIUM. n. f. [ἐπὶ θαλάμῳ.] A nuptial song; a composition upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys's Paraphrase.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPITHEM. n. f. [ἐπιθεμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wiseman's Surgery.

EPITHET n. f. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant mountain's lofty head.

with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous and villanous to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me? —Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakespeare.

EPITOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομὴ.] Abridgment; abbreviature; [illegible] abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by t[illegible]
May shew like all yourself. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for public monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Hakewill.

I think it would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the chief and most material heads. Locke on Education.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To EPI'TOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract, to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes,
[illegible]
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

2. Less properly, to diminish; to curtail.

We have epitomised many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison's Spectator, N°. 135.

EPI'TOMISER } n. f. [from epitomise.] An abridger, an abEPI'TOMIST } [illegible]

EPOCH. } n. f. [ἐποχὴ.] The time at which a new computaEPOCHA } tion is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly sets down this account, computing by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 1.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty, the grand epoch of falsehood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epocha marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go
Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. f. [ἐπωδὸς.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPŒ'A. n. f. [ἐποποιία.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryd. Virgil.

EPULA'TION. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet, feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

EPULO'TICK n. f. [ἐπουλωτικὸς.] A cicatrising medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of ruty, and such like epuloticks. Wiseman of Inflammation.

EQUABI'LITY n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself, evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot on Air.

E'QUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself, even, uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing sweetens acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow, for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot on Diet.

E'QUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly, in the same tenour; evenly, equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common center, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

EQUAL. adj. [æquus, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclus. xxxii. 9.

Equal lot
May join us, equal joy, as equal love. Milton's Par. Lost.

Although there were no man in the world to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.

5. Impartial; neutral

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutulians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryd. Æn.

6. Indifferent

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions.
2 Mac. xiv. 23

8. Upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. 2 Mac. viii. 30.

EQUAL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferiour or superiour to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Sh. Much Ado about Nothing.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome
2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superiours; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison's Spectator, N°. 256.

To my dear equal, in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

To E'QUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another
2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakespeare.

4. To recompense fully.

Then sought Sichæus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryd.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden's Virg.

To E'QUALISE v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Bro.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby on Bodies.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUA'LITY n. s. [from equal.]

Like as a river regains as many equal sides compassed

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction: the hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 26.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness, uniformity; constant tenour; equability

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover Brown's Vulgar Errours.

E'QUALLY adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended both in and immorality Rogers, Sermon 15.

They are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers, Sermon 2.

2. Evenly, equably; uniformly.

If the motion of [illegible] were [illegible] sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially

We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare's King Lear.

EQU'ANGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANI'MITY. n. s. [æquanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind neither elated nor depressed

EQUA'NIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even, not dejected, not elated.

EQUA'TION. n. s. [æquatio, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of many days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending eight minutes of time in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opt.

EQUATION. [In algebra] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3x = 36 - x$. Ludl.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion, according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. D

EQUA'TOR. n. s. [æquator, Latin.] On the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 5.

On the other side the equator there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATO'RIAL. adj. [from equator] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator

EQUIDI'STANT. adj. [æquus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave spherical superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be Ray on the Creation.

EQUIDI'STANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 4.

EQUIFO'RMITY. n. s. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

EQUILA'TERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zo-

duck and their aſpects: why no more aſpects than diametrically oppoſite, and ſuch as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILI'BRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally, to keep even with equal weight on each ſide.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadſtone, have in this affection been drawn from the equator of the loadſtone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fiſhes are equilibrated with the water in which they ſwim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRA'TION. n. ſ. [from equilibrate.] Equipoiſe; the act of keeping the balance even.

The acceſſion of bodies upon, or receſſion thereof from the earth's ſurface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemiſphere. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

In ſo great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are always obſerved.

Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

EQUILI'BRIUM. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. Equipoiſe; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they ſhall come to paſs, or not come to paſs. South's Sermons.

It is in equilibrio

If God ſhall deſcend or no,

Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requiſite to form my tale Prior.

Health conſiſts in the equilibrium between thoſe two powers, when the fluids move ſo equally that they don't preſs upon the ſolids with a greater force than they can bear Arbuth. on Aliments.

ESCU'AGE, n. ſ. [from eſcu, French, a ſhield.]

Eſcuage, that is ſervice of the ſhield, is either uncertain or certain. Eſcuage uncertain is likewiſe twofold: firſt, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in perſon to the king's wars againſt his enemies, either himſelf, or to ſend a ſufficient man in his place, at his coſt, ſo many days as were agreed upon between the lord and his firſt tenant at the granting of the fee; and the days of ſuch ſervice ſeem to have been rated by the quantity of the land ſo holden, as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was ſo much land as, in thoſe days, was accounted a ſufficient living for a knight; and that was ſix hundred and eighty acres as ſome think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l. per Annum*. Sir Thomas Smith ſaith that cenſus equeſtris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the law extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord, as above is ſaid, but twenty days. The other kind of this eſcuage uncertain is called caſtleward, where the tenant by his land is bound, either by himſelf or by ſome other, to defend a caſtle as often as it ſhall come to his courſe. Eſcuage certain is where the tenant is ſet at a certain ſum of money, to be paid in lieu of ſuch uncertain ſervices: as that a man yearly pay for a knight's fee twenty ſhillings; for half his fee, ten ſhillings, or ſome like rate. Cowel.

ESCULENT, adj. [eſculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would faſt five days; but the ſame man uſed to have continually a great wiſp of herbs that he ſmelled on, and ſome eſculent herbs of ſtrong ſcent, as garnick. Bacon.

E'SCULENT, n. ſ. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the eſculent, as radiſh and parſnips, it will make the root the greater, and ſo it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the eſculent, by ſtrengthening the root, it will make the fruit alſo the greater. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 474.

ESPA'LIER, n. ſ. Trees planted and cut ſo as to join

Plant your faireſt tulips in places of ſhelter, and under eſpaliers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

ESSENCE. n. s [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or not: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts's Logick.
   One thinks the soul is air; another, fire,
   Another, blood diffus'd about the Heart;
   Another saith, the elements conspire,
   And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.
   I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More's Divine Dialogues.
   He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South's Sermons
2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is
   The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
3. Existence; the quality of being.
   In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.
4. Being; existent person
   As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
   Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 138.
5. Species of existent being.
   Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.
6. Constituent substance
   For spirits, when they please,
   Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
   And uncompounded is their essence pure;
   Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton's Pa. Lost.
7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.
   She is my essence; and I leave to be,
   If I be not by her fair influence
   Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.
8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.
9. Perfume; odour; scent.

   Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope's Rape of the Lock

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume, to scent.
   The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spectator, N°. 128.

ESSE'NTIAL. adj [essentiais, Latin

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.
   The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.
   From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt's Sermons.
   This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by immaterial and divine power Bentley's Sermons
   A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion, but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns.

   And if each system in gradation roll,
   Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
   The least confusion but in one, not all
   That system only, but the whole must Pope.

Arbuthnot on Air.
Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope's Eff on Man.

EXPANSE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities
A murmuring sound
Of waters issu'd from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain, then stood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.
On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third,
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the watry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f [from expansible.] Capacity of extension, possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.
Together with the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another, else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities.

EXPANSIBLE adj [from expando, Latin] Capable to be extended, capable to be spread into a wider surface.
Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew's Cosmol.

EXPANSION. n. f. [from expand]
1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.
'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley's Sermons.
2. The act of spreading out
The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i. c. 5.
3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended
The capacious mind of man takes its flight farther than the stars, and cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible space Locke.
4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter
Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.
It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore's Creation.

EXPANSIVE adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.
The elastick or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather-glasses. Ray on the Creation.
Then no more
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

To EXPATIATE. v. n. [expatior, Latin.]
1. To range at large, to rove without any prescribed limits.
Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison's Spectat.
He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.
Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan Pope's Eff on Man.
With wonder fir'd, we view the pleading ground,
And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To enlarge upon a law
They had a custom of [illegible]ring the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence. Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Notes on Pope's Odyssey, b. 11
3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense is very improper
Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can politely give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To EXPECT v. a. [expecto, Latin.]
1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

Expired had the term that these two travels
Should render up a reckoning of their travels. Hub. Tale.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the respiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly dies. Walton's Angler.

To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

Ah, thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
[illegible]
Dying or ere they sicken. S.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The buttocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
[illegible] Dryden.

5. [illegible]
A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shakespeare.

To EXPLAIN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To expound; to illustrate, to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he ſtood
Among the mighty, bent on higheſt deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt. Par. Loſt.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to queſtion, not only as a naturaliſt, but as a chymiſt, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philoſophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the reſt of ſounder mind,
The fatal preſent to the flames deſign'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at leaſt to bore
The hollow ſides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Æn.

The mighty Stagyrite firſt left the ſhore,
Spread all his ſails, and durſt the deeps explore;
He ſteer'd ſecurely, and diſcover'd far,
Led by the light of the Maeonian ſtar. Pope's Eſſ. on Crit.

EXPLO'REMENT. n. ſ. [from explore.] Search, trial.

FALSIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [falſification, French, from falſify.]
1. The act of counterfeiting any thing ſo as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by miſconſtruction of the ſenſe, or by falſification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may ſeem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuſe, and even to falſify in vaſe evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is moſt worthily counted heinous. Hooker, b. iii. ſ. 5.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his perſon, exceedeth all falſifications; except it ſhould be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.
2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent poſterity from ſearching after this iſle, and to preſerve his ſtory from detection of falſification. Notes on the Odyſſey.

FA'LSIFIER. n. ſ. [from falſify.]
1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to ſeem what it is not
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falſifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure ſome one proof, others another, but few of them all proofs.
2. A liar; one that contrives falſhoods
Boaſters are naturally falſifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their thanks the worſt together. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falſifier, French.]
1. To counterfeit, to forge; to produce ſomething for that which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuſe that church, which either through corrupt tranſlations of Scripture, delivereth, inſtead of God's ſpeeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God ſpeaketh; or, through falſified additions, propoſeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.
The Iriſh bards uſe to forge and falſify every thing as they liſt, to pleaſe or diſpleaſe any man. Spenſer on Ireland.
2. To

2. To confute, to prove falſe.
Our Saviour's prophecy ſtands good in the deſtruction of the temple, and the deſtruction of the Jewiſh oeconomy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apoſtate, to baffle and falſify the prediction.
3. To violate; to break by falſehood.
It ſhall be thy work, thy ſhameful work, which is in thy power to ſhun, to make him live to ſee thy faith falſified, and his bed defiled. Sidney, b.
He ſuddenly falſified his faith, and villainouſly ſlew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himſelf, miſtruſting nothing leſs than the falſehood of the pyrate. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.
This ſuperadds treachery to all the other peſtilent ingredients of the crime, 'tis the falſifying the moſt important truſt. Decay of Piety.
4. To pierce; to run through.
His creſt is raſh'd away, his ample ſhield
Is falſify'd, and round with javelins fill'd. Dryden's Æn.
Of this word Mr Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falſified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confeſſed; for I remember not to have read it in any Engliſh author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenſer's Fairy Queen. But ſuppoſe it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a poliſhed language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, ſi grate fonte cadent, eſpecially when other words are joined with them which explain the ſenſe. I uſe the word falſify, in this place, to mean that the ſhield of Turnus was not of proof againſt the ſpears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:
Ma ſi l'Uſbergo d'Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falſarlo in neſſun canto. Ariоſto, cant. xxvi.
Falſar cannot otherwiſe be turned than by falſified, for his ſhield was falſed, is not Engliſh. I might indeed have contented myſelf with ſaying his ſhield was pierced, and bored, and ſtuck with javelins. Dryden.
Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturaliſe the new ſignification, which I have never ſeen copied, except once by ſome obſcure nameleſs writer, and which indeed deſerves not to be received.

To FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.
This point have we gained, that it is abſolutely and univerſally unlawful to lie and falſify. South's Sermons.

FALSITY. n. ſ. [falſitas, Latin.]
1. Falſehood; contrariety to truth.
Neither are they able to break through thoſe errours, wherein they are ſo determinately ſettled, that they pay unto falſity the whole ſum of whatſoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 49.
Can you on him ſuch falſities obtrude?
And as a mortal the moſt wiſe delude? Sandys's Paraphraſe.
Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falſity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearneſs or appearance to the underſtanding. South's Sermons.
2. A lye, an errour, a falſe aſſertion or poſition.
That Danubius ariſeth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Ariſtotle by the reſtorer of Epicurus, and all eaſily confutable falſities. Glanv. Sceph. c. 20.

To FA'LTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spaniſh; vaultur, a ſtammerer, Iſlandick, which is probably a word from the ſame radical.]
1. To heſitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling every vein,
Tell on, quoth ſhe. Fairy Queen, b i.
The pale aſſiſtants on each other ſtar'd,
With gaping mouths for ſtuffing words prepar'd,
The ſtill-born ſounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.
He changes, gods! and falters at the queſtion:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.
2. To fail in any act of the body.
This earth ſhall have a feeling, and theſe ſtones
Prove armed ſoldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakeſ. Richard II.
3. To fail in any act of the underſtanding.
How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakneſs of any or all faculties, an exact obſervation of their ſeveral ways of faltering would diſcover. Locke.

To FALTER. v. n. To ſift; to cleanſe. This word ſeems to be merely ruſtick or provincial.
Barley for malt muſt be bold, dry, ſweet, and clean faltered from foulneſs, ſeeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With heſitation, with difficulty, with feebleneſs.

To FAMBLE. v. n [famler, Daniſh.] To heſitate in the

3. Unceremonious; free, as among perſons long acquainted.
Kalandar ſtraight thought he ſaw his niece Parthenia, and was about in ſuch familiar ſort to have ſpoken unto her, but ſhe, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to underſtand that he was miſtaken. Sidney.
4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or cuſtom.
I ſee not how the Scripture could be poſſibly made familiar [illegible] than by a ſermon can be opened. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 22.
Let us chuſe ſuch limbs of noble counſel,
That the great body of our ſtate may go
In equal rank with the beſt governed nation,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakeſ. Henry IV.
Our ſweet
Receſs, and only conſolation leſt
Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xi.
One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and ſtrange, will bring thoſe new ideas into eaſy remembrance. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
5. Well acquainted with; accuſtomed; habituated by cuſtom.
Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton's P. Loſt.

1. An inſtrument uſed by ladies to move the air and cool themſelves.

With ſcarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry Sandys.

Flavia, the leaſt and ſlighteſt toy
Can with reſiſtleſs art employ
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of ſmall force in love;
But ſhe, with ſuch an air and mien,
Not to be told or ſafely ſeen,
Directs its wanton motions ſo,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolneſs to the matchleſs dame,
To every other breaſt a flame. Atterbury.

The modeſt fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins ſmil'd at what they bluſh'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing ſpread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad baſe.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reaſon; full of wild images

What treaſures did he bury in his ſumptuous buildings? and how fooliſh and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would ſhow as much ſingularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful faculty to affirm it. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildneſs of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. ſ. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleaſures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reaſon.

Albertus Magnus, with ſomewhat too much curioſity, was ſomewhat tranſported with too much fancifulneſs towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and aſtrological calculations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FANCY n. ſ. [contracted from phantaſy, phantaſia, Latin; Φαντασία.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itſelf images and repreſentations of things, perſons, or ſcenes of being.

Shakeſpeare, fancy's ſweeteſt child! Milt.
In the ſoul
Are many leſſer faculties, that ſerve
Reaſon as chief: among theſe fancy next
Her office holds, of all external things,
Which the five watchful ſenſes repreſent,
She forms imaginations, airy ſhapes,
Which reaſon joining, or diſjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v.

Though no evidence affects the fancy ſo ſtrongly as that of ſenſe, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full ſatisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reaſon. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddeſs call,
Divinity grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reaſon.

Mens private fancies muſt give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A perſon of a full and ample fortune, who was not diſturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taſte; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addiſon on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone,
Of ſorrieſt fancies your companions making,
Uſing thoſe thoughts which ſhould indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondneſs.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nouriſhed?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakeſ. Merchant of Venice.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Eſtrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourſelf,
To fit your fancies to your father's will,
Or elſe the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of ſingle life. Shakeſpeare.

A reſemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the ſame buſineſs or diverſion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Cotter of Friendſhip.

6. Caprice; humour; whim

True worth ſhall gain me, that it may be ſaid
Deſert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

The ſultan of Egypt kept a good correſpondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they ſhould take a fancy to turn the courſe of that river. Arbuthnot.

The altering of the ſcent, colour, or taſte of fruit, by infuſing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal ſubſtance, are but fancies: the cauſe is, for that thoſe things have paſſed their period, and nouriſh not. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and puniſh the true enemies of religion, much leſs any whom they may fancy to be ſo; all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Sprat's Sermons.

If our ſearch has reached no farther than ſimile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inſide and reality of the thing; but content ourſelves with what our imaginations furniſh us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himſelf; to imagine.

But he whoſe noble genius is allow'd,
Who with ſtretch'd pinions ſoars above the crowd,
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dreſs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er expreſs. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

2. To like; to be pleaſed with.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demoliſh this town in whatever manner ſhe pleaſeth to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMO'NGER. n. ſ. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination

There is a man haunts the foreſt, that abuſes our young plants with carving Roſalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forſooth, deifying the name of Roſalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him ſome good counſel; for he ſeems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakeſp. As you like it.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and ſick.] One whoſe imagination is unſound; one whoſe diſtemper is in his own mind.

FANG. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. The long tuſks of a boar or other animal, any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The ſeaſon's difference; as the icy fang
And churliſh chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I ſhrink with cold, I ſmile and ſay
This is no flattery. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

Some

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which [illegible] though less. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 752.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.
Dryden's Ovid, b. vii.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison's Cato.

Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more inconstant than the wind. Shak. Rom and Juliet.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakespeare.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well,
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubberd's Tale.

3. Humour, inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitg.

FA'NTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.]

FAP. adj. Fuddled, drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

Preſents that beauty, which the dazzling light
Of royal ſplendor Waller.
So in this throng bright Sachariſſa far'd,
Oppreſs'd by thoſe who ſtrove to be her guard:
As ſhips, though never ſo obſequious, fall
Foul in a tempeſt on their admiral. Waller
So fares the ſtag among th' enraged hounds,
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Dryd.
But as a barque, that in foul weather,
Toſs'd by two adverſe winds together,
Is bruſ'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to,
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppoſe. Hudibras, p. ..
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Eſtrange.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
A[illegible] the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
Such miniſters never fare ſo well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animoſities of the nation, and turns their efforts upon the common enemy. Addiſon's Freeholder, N°. 49.
Some give out there is no danger at all, others are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they ſhall fare no worſe than their neighbours. Swift

3. To proceed in any train of conſequences good or bad.
Thus it fareth when too much deſire of contradiction cauſeth our ſpeeches rather to paſs by number than to ſtay for weight. Hooker, b. ii. ſ. 5
So fareth it when with truth falſehood contends. Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill. With it preceding in an impersonal form

5. To feed, to eat, to be entertained with food.
The rich man fared ſumptuouſly every day. Luke.
Feaſt your ears with the muſick awhile, if they will fare ſo harſhly as on the trumpet's ſound Shakeſpeare's Timon.
Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have deſcended ſo low as dogs, but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 25.

FARE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Price of paſſage in a vehicle by land or by water. Uſed only of that which is paid for the perſon, not the goods.
He found a ſhip going to Tarſhiſh; ſo he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarſhiſh. Jon.
The paſſage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to diſcharge his fare. Dryd. Juv.

2. Food prepared for the table; proviſions.
But come, ſo well refreſh'd, now let us pl[illegible]
As meet is, after ſuch delicious fare. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
But when the weſtern winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender graſs and budding flow'r,
Then, at the laſt, produce in open air
Both flocks, and ſend them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well ſuffice,
He that would more is covetous, not wiſe
But ſince among mankind ſo few there are,
Who will conform to philoſophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy eaſe,
And mingle ſomething of our times to pleaſe. Dryd. Juv.
Upon his coming up he ordered the peaſant to ſet before him whatever food he had in his houſe: the peaſant brought out a great deal of coarſe fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily Addiſon's Guardian, N° 99.

FEE. n. s. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle, feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum. Allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominum, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts, fee-absolute, otherwise called fee simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee simple is that whereof we are seized in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever. fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &c. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee simples in his master's name. Hubberd's Tale.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a fray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

1. A companion; one with whom we conſort.
If yeſterday I had twelve fellows like unto myſelf, but not one of them came to a good end. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.
To be your fellow,
But I'll be your ſervant,
Whether you will or no. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
Have we not prieſted each our holy oath,
That one ſhould be the common good of both,
One ſoul ſhould both inſpire, and neither prove Alone his fellow's hindrance in purſuit of love? Dryden.

2. An aſſociate; one united in the ſame affair.
Each on his fellow for aſſiſtance calls,
Attempts the fatal fabrick mounts the walls. Dryden's Virg.

3. One of the ſame kind.
Let partial ſaints ſtill aloud complain,
Think themſelves injur'd that they cannot reign,
And own no property, but where they may
Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A ſhepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of any of his fell

L'Eſtrange.

4. Equal, peer.
Chieftain of the reſt
I choſe him here: the earth ſhall him allow;
His fellows late, ſhall be his ſubjects now. Fairfax, b. ii.
So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer ſervants. Sidney.

5. One thing ſuited to another; one of a pair.

6. One like another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation uſed ſometimes with fondneſs; ſometimes with eſteem, but generally with ſome degree of contempt.
This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The ſame indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakeſ. Othello.
An officer was in danger to have loſt his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleaſant fellow ſaid, that he had been cruſhed, but that he ſaved himſelf upon his horns.
Full fifteen thouſand luſty fellows
With fire and ſword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the ſcoundrel mortal, the mean wretch, the ſorry raſcal.
Thoſe great fellows ſcornfully receiving them, as fooliſh birds fallen into their net, it pleaſed the eternal juſtice to make them ſuffer death by their hands. Sidney, b. ii.
Caſſio hath here been ſet on in the dark
By Rhoderigo, and fellows that are ſcap'd
He's almoſt ſlain, and Rodorigo dead. Shakeſp. Othello.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had ſtill kept loyal to poſſeſſion;
And left me in reputeleſs baniſhment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
How oft the ſight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had it not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and ſign'd to do a deed of ſhame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shakeſ. K. John.
The Moor's abus'd by ſome moſt villainous knave,
Some baſe notorious knave, ſome ſcurvy fellow. Shak. Othell.
The fellow had taken more fiſh than he could ſpend while they were ſweet. L'Eſtrange.
As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our ſtock, and the Sigyonian ſeed
By fraud and theft aſſerts his father's breed. Dryden.
You will wonder how ſuch an ordinary fellow, as this Mr Wood, could have got his majeſty's broad ſeal. Swift.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cooler like, the parſon will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow,
The reſt is all but leather and prunella. Pope's Eſſ. on Man.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provoſt commanded his men to hang him up on the neareſt tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a ſufficient excuſe for non-appearance. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FE'VERFEW. n. ſ. [febris and fugo, Latin.]

It has a fibroſe root; the leaves are conjugated, and divided into many ſegments; the cup of the flower is ſquamoſe and hemiſpherical; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the ſtalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white. The ſpecies are nine, but the firſt, called common feverfew, is the ſort uſed in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens. Miller.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever.

To other climates beaſts and birds retire,
And feveriſh nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives ſuck turns feveriſh, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteneſs to yellow. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feveriſh diſorder diſabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconſtant, now hot, now cold.

We toſs and turn about our feveriſh will,
When all our eaſe muſt come by lying ſtill;
For all the happineſs mankind can gain,
Is not in pleaſure, but in reſt from pain. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the ſun had ſeen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' inceſſant fire,
It ſeem'd as if the ſtars more ſickly roſe,
And farther from the feveriſh North retire. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FE'VERISHNESS. n. ſ. [from feveriſh.] A ſlight diſorder of the fever ſh kind.

FE'VEROUS. adj. [fievreux-ſe, French, from fever.]

FEW adj. [feo, feopa, Saxon, fua, Daniſh.]

1. Not many, not in a great number.

So much the thirſt of honour fires the blood,
So many would be great, ſo few be good,
For who would virtue for herſelf regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? [illegible]

On Winter ſeas we fewer ſtorms behold,
Than foul diſeaſes that infect the fold. Dryden's Virg. Geor.

Men have fewer or more ſimple ideas from without, according as the objects they converſe with afford greater or leſs variety. Locke.

The fewer ſtill you name, you wound the more,
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a ſcore. Pope's Hor. Imitat.

Party is the madneſs of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing ſo nice and delicate, that it is no eaſy matter to find out images capable of giving pleaſure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up [illegible]

2. Sometimes elliptically, not many words.

To anſwer both allegations at once, the very ſubſtance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 22.

So having ſaid, he thus to Eve in few
Say, woman, what is this which thou haſt done? Milton.
Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden's Æn.
The ſtorm reſolves it here in few diſcloſe. Pope's Odyſſey

FEWEL. n. ſ. [feu, French.] Combuſtible matters; materials for keeping fire as firewood, coal.

If a ſpark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthеſt off from any inclination unto furious attempts, muſt not the fear thereof be greater in men, whoſe minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, ſeditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication

Others may give the fewel or the fire,
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inſpire Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cauſe water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Sermons.

To FEWEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FEWNESS. n. ſ. [from few.]

1. Paucity, ſmallneſs of number.

Theſe, by reaſon of their fewneſs, I could not diſtinguiſh from the numbers of the reſt with whom they are embodied. Dryden's Preface to the Hind and Panther.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciſeneſs.

Fewneſs and truth, 'tis thine. Shakeſ. Meaſ. for Meaſure.

To FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanſe a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
By feying and caſting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the huſbandman reaps. Tuſſ. Huſband.

FIB. n. ſ. [A cant word among children.] A lye, a falſehood.

Deſtroy his fib or ſophiſtry, in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope's Epiſtles

I ſo often lie,
Scarce Harvey's ſelf has told more fibs than I. Pope.

To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie, to tell lyes, to ſpeak falſely.

If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you ſpeak truth, you had beſt tell it me. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

FI'BBER. n. ſ. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FI'BRE. n. ſ. [fibra, Fr. fibra, Latin.] A ſmall thread or ſtring; the firſt conſtituent parts of bodies.

Now ſliding ſtreams the thirſty plants renew,

2. A fibre, in phyſick, is an animal thread, of which there are ſeveral kinds: ſome are ſoft, flexible, and a little elaſtick; and theſe are either hollow, like ſmall pipes, or ſpongious and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleſhy fibres: others are more ſolid, flexible, and with a ſtrong elaſticity or ſpring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third ſort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all theſe ſome are very ſenſible, and others deſtitute of all ſenſe: ſome ſo very ſmall as not to be eaſily perceived; and others, on the contrary, ſo big as to be plainly ſeen, and moſt of them, when examined with a microſcope, appear to be compoſed of ſtill ſmaller fibres: theſe fibres firſt conſtitute the ſubſtance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muſcles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of ſome or all of thoſe parts, the more compound organs are framed; ſuch as the lungs, ſtomach, liver, legs and arms, the ſum of all which make up the body. Quincy.

My heart ſinks in me while I hear him ſpeak,
And every ſlackened fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the ſprings of life:
The name of father awes me ſtill. Dryd. Spaniſh Fryar.

FI'BRIL. n. ſ. [fibrille, French.] A ſmall fibre or ſtring.

The muſcles conſiſt of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and incloſed in cells. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FI'BROUS. adj. [fibreux, French, from fibre.] Compoſed of fibres or ſtamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viſcous is plain; for all wood and tow, and cotton and ſilk, have a greedineſs of moiſture. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

I ſaw Petræus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground,
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a lapſing in his hands. Dryden.

The fibrous and ſolid parts of plants paſs unaltered through the inteſtines. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FIBULA. n. ſ. [Latin.] The outer and leſſer bone of the leg, much ſmaller than the tibia: it lies on the outſide of the tibia, and its upper end, which is not ſo high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a ſmall ſinus, which it has in its inner ſide. Its lower end is received into the ſmall ſinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large proceſs, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE. adj. [pical, Saxon.]

1. Changeable, inconſtant; irreſolute, wavering; unſteady; mutable, changeful; without ſteady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongſt a fickle wavering nation. Shak. Hen VI.
A ſlave, whoſe eaſy borrowed pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.
Or ſkitt hovering dreams,
The fickle penſioners of Morpheus' train Milton.
They know how fickle common lovers are,
Their oaths and vows are cautiouſly believ'd
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd,
We in vain the fickle ſex purſue,
Prior.

2. Not fixed; ſubject to viciſſitude.

He would be loth
Us to aboliſh, leſt the adverſary
Triumph, and ſay, fickle their ſtate, whom God
Moſt favours. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b.

FI'CKLENESS. n. ſ. [from fickle.] Inconſtancy, uncertain

Neither her great worthineſs, nor his own ſuffering for her, could fetter his fickleneſs, but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom ſhe complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleneſs,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.
I am a ſoldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleneſs. Shakeſ. Henry VI.

Inſtability of temper ought to be checked, when it diſpoſes men to wander from one ſcheme of government to another, ſince ſuch a fickleneſs cannot but be attended with fatal conſequences. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 25.

Whether out of fickleneſs or deſign I can't tell, I found that what ſhe liked one day ſhe diſliked another. Addiſon.

FI'CKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or ſtability.

Do not now,
Like a young waſteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majeſty on bankrupt terms,
To raiſe a preſent pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICO. n. ſ. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expreſſing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortreſs, he then gives the fico to all that his adverſaries can by ſiege, force, or famine attempt againſt him. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form, manufactured by the potter.

The cauſe of fragility is an impotency to be extended, and therefore ſtone is more fragil than metal, and ſo fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's N. H.

FICTION. n. ſ. [fictio, Latin; fiction, French.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the preſence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a ſufficient ground to worſhip that image, is not God's real preſence, in every creature a far better ground to worſhip it? Stilling fleet.

Fiction is of the eſſence of poetry, as well as of painting; there is a reſemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real, and in the other of a true ſtory by a fiction. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any conſolations,
By wiſe diſcourſe, ſweet tunes, or poets fictions,
If ought I ceaſe theſe hideous exclamations,
While that my ſoul, ſhe, ſhe lives in affliction. Sidney.

So alſo was the fiction of thoſe golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the ſerpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falſehood; a lye.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious, imaginary, invented. A word coined by Prior.

And ſtudy'd lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictitius, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; falſe, not genuine.

Draw him ſtruſty ſo,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned, imaginary.

The human perſons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda reſembles you in nothing but in beauty.

3. Not real, not true.

Milton, ſenſible of this defect in the ſubject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a ſhadowy and fictitious nature, in the perſons of ſin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addiſ. Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falſely, counterfeitly.

Theſe pieces are fictitiouſly ſet down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 20.

FIDE. n. ſ. [fida, Italian.] A pointed iron with which ſeamen untwiſt the cords. Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. ſ. [gyge, Saxon; vedel, Dutch, fidel, German, fidicula, Latin, fidl Erſe.]

1. A ſtringed inſtrument of muſick; a violin.

In

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Addison.

The love-sick maid and fiddle
Is sung, but breaks off in the middle.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings, but could not, for her heart, find where about the tune lay. Addison's Guardian, N°. 93.

v. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Thou fellows being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing; like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbuth. & Pope.

Good cooks cannot abide what they call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. s. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that their grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of diddle-daddle of the same nature. Spectator, N°. 299.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling, giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance, as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear, so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,

3. To cover or adorn with figures.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakes. Richard II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakesp. K. John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end Hooker, b. v.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakes. Hen IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on ancient Medals

6 To image in the mind.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air
And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm. Creation

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FI'LBERT. n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or hulls, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plums, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon, Essay 47.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed:
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet on a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople, the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former, the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal, to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husbandry.

Who steals my purse, steals trash, 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands,
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed Shakespeare's Othello.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept no time. Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like pissing wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.

The primitive was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange's Fables.

Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
They with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Phillips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew,
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

FILTH [fylð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that foils or fouls.
When we in our viciousness grow hard,
The wise gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments, [illegible]
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths favour but themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.
How perfect then is man? From head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our lows from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson's Sermons.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.
It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless L'Estrange, Fabe 38.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filth.]

1. Nastiness, foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Corruption, pollution.
They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime.
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness [illegible] of life imaginable. [illegible]

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty, foul, dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. [illegible]

2. Gross, polluted.
As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s.
The season of pulling of it is first about Lambas, when good part of it will be ripe, that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortim. Husb.
Good flax and good hemp for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimbre to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser. Husb.

FIN n. s. [finn, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish, the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Othello.
Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. More's Antid. against Atheism.
Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore,
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.
Still at his oar th' industrious Libyans plies;
But as he puts, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addis. Ovid's Metam.

FIN-FOO'TED adj. [fin and foot] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided, whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds, which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FI'NABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine

FINGER. n. f. [pinger, Saxon, from fangen, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand conſiſt of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the laſt, where the nails are. The order of their diſpoſitions is called firſt, ſecond, and third phalanx: the firſt is longer than the ſecond, and the ſecond longer than the third. The upper extremity of the firſt bone on each finger has a little ſinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the ſecond and third bones of each finger hath two ſmall ſinuſes, parted by a ſmall protuberance, and the lower extremity of the firſt and ſecond bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a ſmall ſinus: the two protuberances are received into the two ſinuſes of the upper extremity of the ſecond and third bones, and the ſmall ſinus receives the little protuberance of the ſame end of the ſame bones. The firſt bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wriſt and ſecond of the thumb, as they are to the wriſt and firſt of the fingers. The ſecond bone of the thumb is like the firſt bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the firſt and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and ſecond of the fingers. The fingers are moved ſideways only upon their firſt joint. Beſides theſe there are ſome ſmall bones, called oſſa ſeſamoiden, becauſe they reſemble ſeſamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they ſerve as pulleys. Quincy.

You ſeem to underſtand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her ſkinny lips. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never ſaid,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye and ſob,
Becauſe h had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one oppoſite to them bending backwards, and of greater ſtrength than any of them ſingly, which we call the thumb, to join with them ſeverally or united, whereby it is fitted to hold of objects of any ſize or quantity. Ray on the Creat.

FLOWER. n. s. [fleur, French; flos, floris, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many florets, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petals, or leaves, as in borage, buglos, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and these falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariostochia 2d, labiate, and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthium and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcistus, &c but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet or monkshood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cuculate, and galenculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the [illegible] ways impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set together so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the [illegible] its round form, will be like a discus, which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolous, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fistular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juni, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail The term campaniform is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flowers inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.
Britton.

Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower, such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

Macbeth ſhall never vanquiſh'd be, until
Great Birnam-wood to Dunſinane's high hill
Shall come againſt him.
—— That will never be
Who can impreſs the foreſt, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the phyſicians adviſe their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but graſing, and not overgrown with heath; or elſe timber-ſhades, as in foreſts. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 936.

How the firſt foreſt rais'd its ſhady head. Roſcommon.

2. [In law] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful paſtures, privileged for wild beaſts, and fowls of foreſt, chaſe, and warren, to reſt and abide in, in the ſafe protection of the king, for his pleaſure; which territory of ground is bounded with unremoveable marks, and repleniſhed with beaſts of venery or chaſe, and with great coverts of vert for their ſuccour and abode: for the preſervation of which place, vert, and veniſon, there are certain particular laws. The manner of making foreſts is this: the king ſends out his commiſſion, under the broad ſeal of England, directed to certain diſcreet perſons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforeſt; which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made throughout all the country where the ground lies, that none ſhall hunt or chaſe any wild beaſts within that precinct, without the king's ſpecial licence, after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preſervation of the vert and veniſon; and this becomes a foreſt by matter of record. The properties of a foreſt are theſe: a foreſt, as it is ſtrictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commiſſion to a juſtice in eyre for the foreſt; the courts, the officers for preſerving the vert and veniſon, as the juſtices of the foreſt, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foreſters, agiſtors, regarders, bailiffs, and beadles. The chief property of a foreſt is the ſwainmote, which is no leſs incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair Cowel.

To FORESTA'LL. v. a [foreſtallan, Saxon]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be maſter-gunner, ſpend not all

FRA'NKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhœas and dysenteries. Hill.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.

FRANKPLE'DGE. n. f. [francipleginm, Latin, of franc, i. e. liber & purgé, i. e. filii ruffor.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison. whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the trangression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten housholds, and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francipleg.i, view of frankpledge. Cowel.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to ſervile ſhame;
Who from conſent and cuſtom draw
The ſame right to be ruled by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. f. [free and chappel] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the juriſdiction of the ordinary. The king may alſo licenſe a ſubject to found ſuch a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's viſitation. Cowel.

FREE'COST. n. f. [free and coſt.] Without expence; free from charges.

We muſt not vouch any man for an exact maſter in the rules of our modern policy, but ſuch a one as has brought himſelf ſo far to hate and deſpiſe the abſurdity of being kind upon freecoſt, as not ſo much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A ſlave manumitted.

The freedman joſtles, and will be preferr'd;
Firſt come, firſt ſerv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 1.

FRE'EDOM. n. f. [from free]

1. Liberty; exemption from ſervitude; independence.

The laws themſelves they do ſpecially rage at, as moſt repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenſer on Ireland.

O freedom! firſt delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their maſters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inſcribe
Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe:
That falſe enfranchiſement with eaſe is found,
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden's Perſ.

2. Privileges, franchiſes; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I ſworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakeſpeare.

And not incharted, or by fate conſtrain'd. Davies.

FREEHO'LD. n. f. [free and hold] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real poſſeſſion of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to ſuch land or tenements before his entry or ſeiſure. Freehold is ſometimes taken in oppoſition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folcland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better ſort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being ſuch as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the poſſeſſion of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief ſhould be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in ſome of her majeſty's treaſuries. Bacon's Office of Alienat.

There is an unſpeakable pleaſure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and ſnow, will make the owner pleaſed in the poſſeſſion, and ſtout in the defence of it. Addiſon's Freeholder, N°. 1.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift

I ſhould be glad to poſſeſs a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own conſent. Swift to Lord Middleton.

FREEHOLDER. n. f. [from freehold] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did baniſh the old Engliſh freeholder, who could not live but under the law; ſo the law did baniſh the Iriſh lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vaſſalage; without ſlavery; without dependance.

2. Without reſtraint, laviſhly.

If my ſon were my huſband, I would freelier rejoice in that abſence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. Shakeſp. Cariolan.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have beſtow'd to breed this preſent peace,
You would drink freely. Shakeſ. Henry IV.

3. Without ſcruple; without reſerve.

Let ſuch teach others who themſelves excel,
And cenſure freely who have written well. Pope's Eſſ. on Crit.

4. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verſifying, were even to eat acorns with ſwine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

The path to peace is virtue: what I ſhow,
Thyſelf may freely on thyſelf beſtow:
Fortune was never worſhipp'd by the wiſe;
But, ſet aloft by fools, uſurps the ſkies. Dryden's Juv. Sat.

5. Without neceſſity; without predetermination.

Freely they ſtood who ſtood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuſe with the liberty of reaſonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do alſo freely reject it. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Frankly; liberally.

By nature all things have an equally common uſe, nature freely and indifferently opens the boſom of the univerſe to all mankind. South's Sermons.

7. Spontaneouſly; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a ſlave, not a vaſſal.

Had you rather Cæſar were living, and die all ſlaves, than that Cæſar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſar.

If to break looſe from the conduct of reaſon, and to want that reſtraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chuſing or doing the worſe, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expreſſed in the preceding verſe, by their both having been made freemen on the ſame day. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

FREEMI'NDED. adj [free and mind.] Unconſtrained; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully diſpoſed at hours of meat, ſleep, and exerciſe, is one of the beſt precepts of long laſting. Bacon, Eſſay 31.

FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The ſtate or quality of being free.

2. Openneſs, unreſervedneſs; ingenuouſneſs; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he pleaſe, for the freeneſs of the confeſſion. Dryden.

3. Generoſity, liberality.

I hope it will never be ſaid that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, ſhall in their corporations exceed the clergy itſelf, and their ſons, in freeneſs of giving. Sprat.

FREESCHO'OL. n. f. [free and ſchool.] A ſchool in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeschool at least erected in every diocess. Dawes.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeschool in ——shire, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a free-spoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'ESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHI'NKER. n. f. [free and think.] A Libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.

FREEWI'LL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezr. vii. 13.

FREEWO'MAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze, [vriesen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakesp. Rich. III.
Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.

To FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare's Richard III.
My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakesp.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.
Death came on apace,
And exercis'd below his iron reign,
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted, part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prologue.
Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juv.
Freighted with iron, from my native land
I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FREIGHT n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's Æn.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FRE'IGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A worthless woman. An old word wholly forgotten.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakes. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison's Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body inclineth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.

FRE'QUENCE n. f. [frequence, Fr. frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequence of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakespeare's Timon.
He, in full frequence bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Paradise Reg.

FRE'QUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence, the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterb.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st e're while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred should'st thou hast met, [illegible]? Ben Jonson.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand,
His front yet threatens, and his frown command Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
—A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak. Ham.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty, mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gates should yede,
They soon might be corrupted,
Or like not of the frowy fede,
Or with the weeds be gotted. Spenser's Pastorals.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despite; but his armour so naturally representing ice, and all his furniture so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see any thing that pleased me better. Sidney, b. ii.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's Æn.

Fierce Boreas, with his off'spring, issues forth

FUME. n. ſ. [fumée, French, fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume,
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to what of due,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly Lucretius.

2. Vapours; any volatile parts flying away
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes Shakespeare
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In Winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or grosser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons.
Purg'd on flesh we live, and spare fumes,
As fill'd with fumes of unconcocted wine Dryden's Pers. Sat
Power, like new wine, does your weak brain so prize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise,
But time these yielding vapours will remove.
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Juven.

4. Rage, heat of mind, passion.
The fumes of his passion do ready intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

Keep his brain fuming Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil'd in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.
We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The flaggard sleep beneath its sacred beam,
Nor their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

4. To be in a rage.
When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.

To FUME. v.
1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden
The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unsavory things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortim.

And with an accent more than mortal spoke,
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul. Dryden's Æn.
4. [From furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.
The sight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit, and I believe every reader's imagination is pleased, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

FURZE. n. s. [ȝyrr, Saxon.] Gorse, gosse.
The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heaths and up and commons in England: the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Miller.
Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furzen, the turf and the cole. Tusser. Husb.
For fewel, there groweth generally in all parts great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FUTURI'TION. n. ſ. [from future.] The ſtate of being to be, of being to come to paſs hereafter.
Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption ſhould reſt only in the number of poſſibilities, and hang ſo looſe in reſpect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poiſe, whether ever there ſhould be ſuch a thing or no? South's Sermons.

FU'TURITY. n. ſ. [from future.]
1. Time to come; events to come.
Not my ſervice paſt, nor preſent ſorrows,
Nor purpoſ'd merit in futurity,
Can ranſom me. Shakeſpeare's Othello.
All futurities are naked before that All-ſeeing Eye, to whom a thouſand of which is no more hundred by diſtance of time than the leaſt of an angel can be determined by diſtance of place.
I will contrive ſome way to make it known to futurity that I had your lordſhip for my patron.
Thus, great Amphiarus, thy bird from thee,
Though ſkill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.
2. The ſtate of being to be; futurition.
It may be well reckoned among the bare poſſibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring ſuch a free, ſedate and intent mind, as, it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanv. Scepſ. c. 10.

A bawd, ſir, fy upon him! Shakeſ. Meaſure for Meaſure.
But fy, my wand'ring muſe, how thou do'ſt ſtray
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I ſwear, I'll ſcratch your face
Let go, for ſhame; you make me mad for ſport.
My mouth's my own; and if you kiſs, I'll bite. Dryden.
Fy, madam, he cried, we muſt be paſt all theſe gentries. Tatler, N°. 54.

G.

G Has two ſounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, becauſe it is formed by a preſſure ſomewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue againſt the upper gum. This ſound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull The other ſound, called that of the ſoft G, reſembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i, as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away, as in the French, from which theſe words are commonly derived; thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often ſilent in the middle of words before h; as, night The Saxon Ȝ, ȝ, ſeems to have had generally the ſound of y conſonant; whence gate is by ruſticks ſtill pronounced yate.

And my gaiage grown full to my heel. Spenser Pastorals.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galanga, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste than the smaller sort. They are both brought from the East Indies, the small kind from China, and the larger from the island of Java, wherewith the people, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small sort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.

GALAXY. n. f. [γαλαξίας; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way, a stream of light in the sky.

And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

A brown, for which heaven would a band
The galaxy, and stars be turned. Cleaveland.

Her scorn because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley's Sermons.

We meet with gut-tuscan sometimes in large quantities, called [illegible]es, which is the purest, and [illegible] in large [illegible]. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers, [illegible] or reddish colour, its smell is strong and disagreeable, its taste acrid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a gummy and a resinous nature, being inflammable [illegible] as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common angelica, of a strong smell, and acrid taste, but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in asthmas, coughs, and hysterick complaints. Hill's Materia Medica.

I yielded incense a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus. xxiv. 15.

GALE. n. f. [gabling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?

Wings
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally refuse. Addison.

GA'LEAS. n. f. [galeasse, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galeasses. Addison's Remarks on it.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus capped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

[illegible] with a hat.

GA'LLIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three pattereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar.

Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarmentus, and forced again to their galiots. Knolles's History of the Turks.

GALL. n. f. [geala, Saxon, gal, Dutch.]

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murth'ring ministers! Shak.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

It drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This position informs us of a vulgar errour, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb more peremptorily implies, It's as bitter as gall, whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter, and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey on Consumptions.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk. Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown's Vul. Err.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Hither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakesp.

She still insults, and you must still adore,
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd. Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]

This is the tamest wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger, and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch: this may be sore and vexing, but that stupifying and deaden no[illegible] Government of the Tongue, f. 8.

6. Anger, bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage,
He grows disputed and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow.

5. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls. the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposites her egg the lacerated vesicles of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall, and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescencies which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind, and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather, and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak nuts Bacon's Natural History, N° 635

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth,
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth Shakespeare.

GARLICK n. ſ. [gar, Saxon, a lance, and leek, the leek that ſhoots up in cloves. Skinner.]
It has a bulbous root, conſiſting of many ſmall tubercles include in a tunicle, the leaves are plain, the flowers conſiſt of ſix leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the ſtalk; and are ſucceeded by ſubrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundiſh ſeeds. Miller.
Garlick is not an extremely ſtrong, and to moſt people a diſagreeable ſmell, and of an acrid and pungent taſte. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plaſters of garlick to the ſoles of the feet, which will in a very ſhort time give a ſtrong ſmell to the breath. Mice will ſmell ſtrongly of garlick three or four hours after a perſon has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taſte ſtrongly to their fleſh, and in ſome degree to their eggs. Bruiſed, and laid on any tender part of the ſkin, it corrodes it, and raiſes bliſters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but aſſiſts digeſtion, and [illegible] the ſtomach. Hill.
Garlick has, of all our plants, the greateſt ſtrength, affords moſt nouriſhment, and ſupplies moſt ſpirits to thoſe who eat but a ſmall bulk. Temple.
'Tis mortal ſin to feaſt on to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a ſacred pow'r:
Religious nat'ral ſure, and bleſt abodes,

GA'TTEN TREE. See COUNTRY-HAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain. Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of ἀγαλλω; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwaudu, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy, the cause of joy, a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament, a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.

The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shakespeare's King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon. Shakespeare.

Some bound for Guinea, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear,
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design
For fouled turbants finest holland wear. Dryd. Abs. Mirab.

To GAUDE. v. n. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult, to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and goude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gauderies, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and tawdry gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South's Sermons.

A pair fond, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by rarn fond gaudily known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryd. Ind
Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hooke's Rom Hiſt

2. To relent; to grow moiſt; to melt or ſoften; to thaw

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow ſoft; as the cruſt of bread, biſket, ſweetmeats, and ſalt. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Only a ſweet and virtuous ſoul,
Like ſeaſon'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives. Herbert

Unleſs it is kept in a hot houſe, it will ſo give again, that it will be little better than raw malt Mortimer

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and ſpread them. hay is apt to give in the cock. Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phraſe

Up and down he traverſes his ground,
Then nimbly ſhifts a thruſt, then lends a wound,
Now back he gives, then ruſhes on amain. Daniel's C. War.

4. To GIVE in. To go back, to give way.

The charge was given with ſo well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To GIVE in to. [A French phraſe.] To adopt, to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalliſts: the poets, however, have ſometimes given in to it, and furniſh us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addiſon on Medals.

This conſideration may induce a tranſlator to give in to thoſe general phraſes, which have attained a veneration in our language from being uſed in the Old Teſtament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either ſtupidly negligent, or elſe giving in with all their might to thoſe very practices that are working their deſtruction. Swift

6. To GIVE off. To ceaſe; to forbear.

The puniſhment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as ſoon as we perceived that it reached the [illegible]. Locke on Education.

7. To GIVE over. To ceaſe; to act no more.

If they will ſpeak to the purpoſe, they muſt give over, and ſtand upon ſuch particulars only as they can ſhew we have either added or abrogated, otherwiſe than we ought, in the matter of church polity Hooker, b iii.

Neither hath Chriſt, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; leſt, by being born a man, we ſhould think he hath given over to be God, or that becauſe he continued God, therefore he cannot be man alſo. Hooker, b. v.

Give not o'er ſo to him again; intreat him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold. Shakeſpeare's Meaſure for Meaſure.

The ſtate of human actions is ſo variable, that to try things oft, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Nat Hiſt

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and ſtill anſwered he had no leiſure, whereupon the woman ſaid aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon's Apophthegms.

So Satan, whom repulſe upon repulſe
Met ever, and to ſhameful ſilence brought,
Yet gives not o'er, though deſperate of ſucceſs. Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?
And muſt we now give o'er,
And only end where we begun?
In vain this miſchief we have done,
If we can do no more. Dauba

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to deſiſt from any farther purſuits after fame. Addiſ

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the ſame reaſon. Swift

8. To GIVE out To publiſh, to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himſelf was ſome great one. Acts viii. 9.

Julius Cæſar laid aſleep Pompey's preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out how Cæſar's own ſoldiers loved him not. Bacon, Eſſay 60.

Your ill-wiſhers will give out you are now going to quit your ſchool. Swift

9. To GIVE out. To ceaſe; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,
Like moles within us, heave and caſt about:
And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;
They never coo, much leſs give out. Herbert

Madam, I always believ'd you ſo ſtout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

10. To GIVE way. To yield, not to reſiſt, to make room for Private reſpects, with him, gave way to the common good. Carew's Survey of Cornwal.

Perpetual puſhing and aſſurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a ſeeming impoſſibility give way. Collier

Scarce had he ſpoken when the cloud gave way;
The miſts flew upward, and diſſolv'd in day. Dryd. Æn.

His golden horn gives way with ſtony blows,
Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden's Æn.

GIVER. n. ſ. [from give.] One that gives, donor; beſtower, diſtributer; granter

Well we may afford
Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b v.

By thee how fairly is the giver now
Repaid? But gratitude in thee is loſt
Long ſince. Milton's Paradiſe Regain'd, b iv.

I have not liv'd ſince firſt I heard the news,
The gift the guilty giver doth accuſe. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Both gifts deſtructive to the givers prove,
Alike both lovers fall by thoſe they love. Pope.

GIZZARD. n. ſ. [geſier, French; gigeria, Latin. It is ſometimes called gizzern.]

1. The ſtrong muſculous ſtomach of a fowl

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up ſtones to convey them into their ſecond ventricle, the gizzerne. More.

In birds there is no maſtication in the mouth; but in ſuch as are not carnivorous, it is immediately ſwallowed into the crop, a kind of anteſtomach, where it is moiſtened by ſome proper juice from the glandules diſtilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muſculous ſtomach. Ray.

Fatt'ning there they noſtle near the throne,
And [illegible]
By their high crops and corny gizzards known Dryden.

2. It is proverbially uſed for apprehenſion or conception of mind, as, he frets his gizzard, he harraſſes his imagination.

But that which does them greateſt harm,
Their ſpiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated ſots
In fevers ſtill Hudibras, p. iii. cant 1.

Satisfaction and reſtitution lie ſo curſedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that the blood in their veins is not half ſo dear to them as the treaſure they have in their coffers. L'Eſtrange

Have pity, goddess. Dryden.

GLADE. n. s. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine, whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucar It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
So flam'd his eyen with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade.
Fairy Queen, b. 1. cant. 11.
Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Hubberd's Tale.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
For noonday's heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd. Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.
By the heroes armed shades,
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades,
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife! Pope's St Cecil
